which had been encased in the glacial ice of the mountainous region, scientists discovered Oetzi was felled by an arrow after an X-ray of his corpse. Further research revealed that the Iceman likely was involved in hand-to-hand combat before his death due to bruising and an area of trauma to the back of the head. Due to the violent nature of his death and a series of tragedies over the years involving many of the Iceman's researchers, Oetzi, like some Egyptian mummies, comes with theories of his own legendary curse, according to The Guardian. In early January, scientists recently unveiled through the use of CT scans and genetic analysis that Oetzi suffered from an infection due to a pathogen that causes gastritis and stomach ulcers, according to Discovery News. "We were able to decode the complete genome of a 5,300-year-old Helicobacter pylori," Paleopathologist Albert Zink told Discovery News, referring to the pathogen. Then go to step 5. Cool, wet weather to break Germany heat wave next week. Weather News - July 06, 2017, 12:14:07 PM EDT. Following nearly a week of stifling heat across Germany, a shift to average temperatures and unsettled weather will be welcome.

graves Even without the use of genetic research, another ancient biological lifeform was discovered after being freed from a 400-year-old ice tomb, due to the retreating Teardrop Glacier on the Canadian Ellesmere Island. In the region, 400-year-old mosses were observed resuming their existence by project researchers at the University of Alberta in 2013, according to National Geographic. "As we walked up to the edge of the glacier, we could see patches of mosses that seemed to be coming out from underneath the ice," Project Leader Catherine La Farge told National Geographic. Further research indicated that mosses, dated to be between 400 and 600 years old, had resumed growing after being freed after centuries of being buried under the ice. In 2012, scientists also successfully revived a plant that was nearly 30,000 years old after finding seeds preserved by Siberian permafrost, according to The Guardian. "We consider it essential to continue permafrost studies in search of an ancient genetic pool, that of pre-existing life, which hypothetically has long since vanished from the earth's surface," the scientists said in an article published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences of the United States.
